The object: survival. The target: her DNA.
Twenty-five years ago, twelve women in the small town of Benton, Pennsylvania contracted a mysterious, infertility disease. One by one, they became barren. Code-named nephthysis, the threat becomes global and soon sparks an international, intelligence race to fight a growing infertility epidemic.

Five thousand miles away, in a northeastern Italian town, one of the twelve gives birth to a healthy baby girl. Jewel Carlone's birth is virtually unknown to the medical world until the U.S. government starts digging and discovers shecarries a gene with the answers. Powerful people are prepared to pay for her DNA code.

While on a trip to Austria Jewel meets Leal Trelles, a gifted-yet-mysterious disease detective with a past no doctor is allowed to have. When the government threatens Leal with prosecution and exposure of an alarming secret, he is backed into a corner. Their instructions are clear: get the code, produce a drug and they'll look the other way. For Leal, it's just not that simple. He is unprepared for the effect Jewel has on him and soon a trip with her to the Himalayas suddenly goes very, very wrong...
