The Human Story: Pride or Remorse Senior Lecturer in English Language and Literature Keith Walker

Not only does history teach us about past civilizations but it also directs us to what future civilization has in store for us. It can also expose periods and incidents in history that some may think best left hidden. In the hope that future generations will empathise with the feelings of every race and hence see themselves as part of one human family, Keith Walker links elements of the human story to show that if we keep doing the same things for generation after generation the consequences will be no different to those experienced by our ancestors.
